MRS. OLIVER AT SAREPTA HALL.-Mrs. Oliver made her appearance upon the stage at Sarepta Hall, last night, at ten micutes past perintendent of Schools, who stated that he had exht o'clock, and was greeted by a small audience, some of whom were gray haired gentlemen, drawn there, no doubt, to hear Mrs. O's version gi the Oliver-Cameron breach of promise suit; expecting to hear a full explanation of all that has transpired between her and the aged ex-Senator, all of whom were disappointed.

Mrs. O. is a lady of medium height, darl eres, hair and complexion, and were a black aress; of rather prepossessing appearance, and teachers could thus be paid three months lenger in the reporter's eye, might have been considered handsome about twenty years ago. Though she was unattended upon the stage she seemed apparently at ease, but her manner and style peal from this decision of the Superintendent of speaking plainly indicated that this was her on the part of Albert Lyles, which was read and maiden effort in the lecture field. She spoke referred to the Committee on Complaints and with her hat and cloak on. Mrs. O. began her lecture by declaring that she could not say what she had intended in consequence of the short time she had to prepare herself; she had no written document, but she to be paid. intended to make a few remarks and tell the people how she had been treated in her late suit. She had no doubt that all had been made tamiliar with her trial through the newspapers; he had supposed that justice was dealt out in Washington, but her trial there had dispelled from her mind any such idea, and she wished to inform her Irish friends that she had been sadly taken in ; the law was made for the protection of the rieb, not the poor, and as long as such men as Simon Cameron and Ben Butter, with their money, impudence, dishonesty and paid periurors, could macipulate the legal wires, there was no protection for the lone widow and those without money; that her trial had fully demonstrated that the whole of Pennsylvania had been resurrected and brought to Washington for the purpose of dogging her every move ment, and to swear falsely on the witness stand in the interest of that miserable old bypoeric, Simon Cameron, and to thwart justice. To think learned gentlemen would assist such a man .s Ben. Butler to keep her in a chair for five hours at a time, to be bembarded by his disgusting questions, was hardly to be believed. She ew disjointed sentences upon morality, and then began another onslaught on that "miscrable Ben Butler." criticising his conduct while a deneral at New Orleans, and wound up one of her happiest sentences by telling her Irish iriends, (very few of whem were present,) for the second time, that they need not expect jus ine as long as such men as Butler and Cam-rau wei ain existence. She bere paid another itib we to injured bosor, and again flow back on pastice, and said that all this cry about this being "the land of the free and the home of the brave,"where justice was dealt out to every one, was moonshipe; it sended very well and locked inkewise to priot, int when a person has to tackle such men as Comerco and Butler, it was noth ing but a hellow mockery and empty well. She here reverted to the despisable method that Butler had pursued in paying parties a dollar a day to ferret out her every set, and any set her Irish friends to go back to Irishand carine. than live here under the oppression of Butter and Cameron. She could have had witnesses to prove every word she had netered during the trial, but they were in the government cuspley and knew if they said one word on the ride of justice that it would be worth their simotions One reason why she came to Virginia was be cause she believed in this State, if nowhere c'es, the spirit of Washington was not dead. So sgain paid a tribute to her Irish friends and xielled their bravery in time of war, and their enivalry and honesty in time of power. Miss. Oliver here made mention of the letters that had passed tetween her and Simon, and said the could have produced bashels, but it was no use; for her there was no justice; she had to contend against such beings as Burler, Peter con, Cameror, etc. She told the little story shout the decitorive who was jaid six dollars a day and boarded at the Arlington Hetel; he, Limself as an chine wratger to Washington, ter ulmest dry by his concing and perfide, and then bestened away to report to Ben Butler such isformation as he had getten, so colored for a glass of whiskey, was false; Butler might buy some people, but not Itish; they make claim to be such, but were only crosses. Mrs. O. was explaining that no line should be drawn between nationalists, and was doing it very nicely too, but unfortunately she grappled head, made a few grimaces, and came to a full stop, and while she was deliberating whether to tart fresh or let the audience guess at the rest of the septence, Mr. Whiting, editor of the Sunday Call, with that preverbial gallantry for which newspaper men are noted, came to her rescue. Mr. Whiting, like a great many public speakers unaccustomed to public speaking, got off the words, "Mrs. Oliver," very much to the credit of the profession to which he belongs, but as he too had no written doouments, he could get no further. This was the crisis that the boys had been waiting for, and "sit dows," put him out," rescunded throughout the hall. After several attempts Mr. Whiting made Mrs. (), understand that he came there to hear the asked truth, and wanted to know what transpired when Mr. Cameron visited her room, etc. She rejoined by saying she would write it out, and send it to him. Amid much laughter, on the part of the audience, Mr. W. took his seat.

sate soit the purpose for which it was obtained.

Mis. O west on to say that Ben Butler, during the trial, reaffed at the idea. On propester let alone wemen, were thieves; that it was true they were mighty coen jerked up, ledged in the watch house and made to pay five dollars for their folly, by just such a class of secondrels as Quiet having been restored, Mrs. O. resumed her discourse, telling how, es a poor widow, sho had listened to and believed every word Cameron had said to her, and confided implicitly in his every utterance, but alas he was but one remove from Bret Harte's "Heathen Chinee ;" had taken advantage of her confidence and deserted ber like the hypocrite he was. She then spoke of Grant, politics; advised all Irishmen, if they were not already democrats, to e-ponse that cause, and purge the country of that infameus clique Cameron, Butler, etc., and and then a poor Irish person could get justice. She was not done with the case, would take it to the Supreme Court, turn democratic politisian and beat old Cameron at his own game. Mrs. O. then thanked the audience for their kind attention, and said she intended to pay Alexandria another visit, when she expected t) be greeted by more of her Irish friends than were at that time before her, made a tolerable stage bow, and made her exite. The lecture as a lecture was a complete failure, composed mostly of disconnected sentences and matter which had no reference to her suit at all. But if Mrs. O. will write out her argument, and memorize it as she says she intends to do. after a few years' practice, she will undoubtedly rank with the average lecturer.

PRESBYTERY OF WASHINGTON .- This Pres bytery to which the First Presbyterian Church of this city belongs, has been holding its session in Weshington for a day or two past.

The following resolution cil-red by Judge Drake, created a considerable stir in the meet-eg: "It being a matter of common fame that mem ters of churcher in this Presbytery are addicted to attending theatres, the Pre-bytery would bear solemn testimony against the practice " a world ly conformity inconsistent with Christian vowe, as spiritually hurtful, as countenancing and aiding to support an institution which the general assembly of our church has denounced as 'a school of immorality,' and as directly tending to obliterate the line of demarkation which should always be distinctly drawn and plainly visible between the followers of Christ and the world, and the Presbytery earnestly enjoin up-on pastors to preach against such practice, and upon thurch sessions to discipline church memters who are guilty thereof."

The subject was referred to a committee of five to report at the fall meeting of the Presbytery, Mr. Edward Warren, of the Metropolitan church, was introduced ea a candidate for the ministry, recommended to the board of oducation, and taken under the expect the Presbytery.
It was decided, on invitation of Rev. Mr.

Todd, to hold the next state! meeting of the Presbytery at Manassas, Va. The Presbytery adjourney to meet in the New York avenue Presbyterian church on the second Monday in May, at ten o'clock, when the examination of candidates for licenses will be the order of business.

INTERESTING CASE,-The Corporation Court has been engaged for the past two days in the trial of the case of J. W. Brooks ve. W. C. Harvey. The ease grows out of an overpayment of $50 by Harvey to Brooks for a load et cysters, in Wishington. Brooks was ar rested here on his way down the river on the charge of stealing the money, and was committed to juit by Justice Padgett. He was sherwards brought before Judge Lowe on a write of habitas corpus and released on the the detrotive, had come to her and represented ground of some informality in the papers.
